Today's Prayer

Say this prayer today

Dear Jesus, as I call on you today, I realise that I often come asking for favours. Today I'd like just to be in your presence. Let my heart respond to Your Love.

Reflection on the Gospel

In the past, this Sunday because of the gospel reading was referred to as “the Sunday of the greatest commandments”. Once again we meet Jesus pitted in debate with the legalistic Scribes, or religious lawyers whose duty was to interpret scripture. The Old or First Testament was the area of study and debate. It now appears that the religious lawyers had discovered 613 commandments divided by importance into light and strict. Further, these same commandments were divided into 248 positive (“you will”) and 365 negative (“you will not”). The average believing Jew was thus confronted with a daunting task: how could one always be sure of what is light and strict? How can one avoid the sin of mistaking a “positive” for a “negative” injunction? And, when so bound, what required sacrifices, ritual cleansing and prayers are to be offered? The only “sure way” or halachah (‘the rule of right conduct’) was provided by eminent rabbis or teachers who “summed up the Law” as a guide to the perplexed and scrupulous. Rabbi Hillel, a contemporary of Jesus and one of the greatest teachers of Israel, once said: “if one does not learn the Torah one is guilty of suicide”. His other adage “What is hateful to you do not do to your neighbor; that is the whole Torah (the Law). Go and learn it” parallels the advice given in Tobit 4:15 and Jesus’ own words (known as “the Golden Rule” in Matthew 7:12). But the revolutionary context of Jesus’ statement is his combining two positive laws: you shall love the Lord your God (Deuteronomy 6:5) and you shall love your neighbor as yourself (Leviticus 19:18). This deceptively simple command of love soon became for the Jewish Christians and their converts the identifying characteristic of their faith. So much so that even in our own day when unpracticed it becomes a biting indictment of Christian hypocrisy. Could anything be more simple or demanding than loving one another? Let us examine ourselves in honest light: are we truly witnesses to Christ and his love in our respect and love for each other? This love grows first in our own hearts and spreads to others as an image and likeness of God himself.

Study of Today's Readings

FIRST READING: These verses are part of the Covenant Code. In the Exodus narrative, God declared his Law to his people through Moses at Mount Sinai. The code regulated both worship and social behavior. The laws on behavior tried to ensure both loyalty to the nation and equitable treatment for the weak in society. In ancient times, patriotism and religious practice were so intertwined that rules governing such behavior could be called "religious nationalism." Hence, the worship of idols was akin to treason among the Israelites, and was punished accordingly. Warnings against abuse of widows and orphans also carried heavy weight. These were the weakest members of the nation, for they were homeless in a social system based upon extended families. It would be easy to take advantage of them. But the caveat of divine judgment tried to check such behavior. The shame of such acts would carry on to one's descendants. For God Himself would punish this crime by making wives widows and children orphans. Exodus painted love of God and love of neighbor in stark terms.

SECOND READING: Last week, Paul's first letter to the Thessalonians began with a blessing and praise. The community at Thessalonika had adopted the faith against great opposition. In contrast to the internal strife in the Corinthian assembly, this church had a cohesive faith with a sense of unity and purpose. The

Upcoming Events

28. Simon and Jude (the first century), listed among the twelve apostles, are traditionally referred to as Simon the Zealot since he probably belonged to a type of anti-Roman "liberation army" and Jude, "the cousin of the Lord" because of his relationship to Jesus. Simon is said to have died in Edessa, Syria. Jude, also called Thaddeus, has become since the 18th century the patron of hopeless cases. He is said to have suffered martyrdom in Persia (present day Iran). Traditionally it rains on Sts. Simon and Jude's day.
-On this day in 1918 the Czechoslovak Republic was proclaimed.
29. Peter of Gubbio (+1306), an Augustinian friar, was a popular preacher in the trecento.
-Today in 1923 Turkey officially became a Republic and in 1929 the Stock Market crashed.
30. Thoger (+1065), a priest and missionary, who for his preaching and organization is called the "Apostle of Iceland".
31. -The Vigil of All Hallows ("All Saints") has come down to us Hallowe'en from certain pre-Christian Irish customs commemorating the beginning of winter when "the spirits walk".
-Reformationfest or Reformationday recalling Martin Luther's symbolic nailing of the 95 theses to the Wittenberg Church door in 1517- an event-ultimately leading to the fracturing of Christian unity.
